

Some International statistics

40 best players on Concrete, Eternit, Felt and overall.

Based on almost* all international championship tournaments between 1970 and 2019.

 Not included tournaments for FIMS

A short notice about these lists

Since 1994 I have collected results for all Swedish players from all competitions on Eternite and Concrete. In 1996 I made the first unofficial Swedish rankings based on these results. Since 2004 the Swedish Federation developed a system, based on this work and they also handle the administration since then.

Although ... I continued to collect all results. I also tried to collect all international championship results and, although I still miss the results from some competitions, it is almost complete.

In order to make a decent ranking based on the results*, you have to find a system to compare different tournaments in some way. The way I decided to use was to determine an average for every competition played. This average would then be compared to a constant and you would thereby determine a "Weight" for every competition.

For example, we played the European Cup in Bergheim in Austria in 2005. The average, based on the 40 best players was 20.26. Divided by the Constant 22,72, you get the weight of 1,121422.

This means that for each player you multiply his/hers result by 1,121422
Harald Erlbruch, who was the best player, 168 total on 9 rounds, an average of 18,67, gets the calculated result of 188,3989.

And in the same way we played the European Cup in Spooronk in Holland in 2004, which was quite a difficult course. The average of the 40 best players was 21,84, the weight was 1,04029 and Alf Pettersson who was the best with 188 on 9 rounds, an average of 20,89, gets the calculated result of 195,575.

As you can see, the result Harald made is still a bit better, but it's only 0.8 "rankingpoints" for each round (21,73-20,93).

In every ranking system I think there are flaws. In this system the problem is to decide How to calculate the average for every tournament. In the case above I have used exactly the same number of players, 40. But when you try to compare competitions from different years or different kind of tournaments, well let's say it's not that easy ...

These lists that you've gotten are based only on International Championship competitions. I also decided that to make it to the top 40 on each surface, you had to have competed in 5 competitions on Concrete/Eternit and at least 3 on Felt.

I have also made an attempt to calculate the best player on all surfaces. To do this I have separated the results at a tournament that are played on two different coarses into two tournaments. And in the same way as mentioned above set a constant for all surfaces. Is this the "best" way to tell who is the best overall player. I am pretty sure it isn't but

Note that this, as opposite to the World ranking list presented on the web, is only statistics. It doesn't say anything about who won or took a medal or anything,

IT'S ONLY STATISTICS ! But suffice to say, I like it 😊
